

Being a Holoramic Visionary

I like to think that I am an ordinary human being, having lived and worked conventionally with my fellow human beings during my lifetime, much like any other. However, this is just one side of my story. To find Inner Peace and meaning, the principal purpose of my life since I was seven has been to unify the conceptions of God and Universe, which provide the incompatible contexts for religion and science, respectively.

However, because I am now a Gnostic, living consciously and intelligently in union with the Divine, it is not easy to explain where I am coming from and what is causing me to write these reflections. I have overcome this problem of language by coining new words and terms, changing the meanings of many English words, and borrowing some from other languages, especially in the East. However, without the experiences and concepts that underlie these terms, they cannot be readily understood.

The principal difficulty is that I am a Holoramic visionary, able to view the Totality of Existence as a coherent whole, from Greek ólos 'whole' and órāma 'sight, view', cognate with panoramic 'all-seeing'. Because the creative power of Life has healed my fragmented mind and split soul in Wholeness, I look at the world we live in from a Whole-seeing perspective. By standing outside myself with Self-reflective Intelligence, I can thereby see that Wholeness is the union of all opposites, a statement I call the Principle of Unity. This is akin to Heraclitus's Hidden Harmony, which Aristotle rejected, sending Western thought and reason into the cul-de-sac it finds itself in today.

For the world we live in is inherently paradoxical. So, if we exclude self-contradictions from our reasoning, as mathematicians do, we are inevitably led into delusion. I can thus see that the world most people live in is upside down, illogically putting second things first. We cannot understand what it means to be human from an anthropocentric perspective, regarding the universe as only matter, space, and time and physics as the primary science. Rather, to understand what is happening to us all as a species, I have turned inwards to rationally map the vast nonmaterial realm, called the Cosmic Psyche, revealing a world of exquisite, ineffable beauty, illuminated by the radiant Light of Consciousness.

The most significant consequence of the irrefutable, universal truth of the Principle of Unity is that all structured beings, emerging from the Divine Origin of the Universe, are born to die. This includes our bodies, of course, but also the around twenty civilizations that have existed during the 5,000-year patriarchal epoch. So technological development cannot drive economic growth indefinitely, something I visualized in 1979, when developing an innovative marketing programme for Decision Support Systems (DSS) for IBM in London. The global economy holds the seeds of its own destruction within it.

Accordingly, I resigned from IBM the following year and set out to apply the burgeoning skills of information systems architects to design a post-industrial economic system that would give everyone the opportunity to realize their fullest potential as intelligent human beings, far beyond machines with so-called artificial intelligence (AI). For I was living in the middle of the Cold War, being fought between the monetary economic ideologies of capitalism and communism. So, following the invention of the computer in the 1940s, we had a wonderful opportunity to develop the universal system of thought that could lead to World Peace, which Albert Einstein had called for in 1946.

However, in 1982, when working as an IT consultant in Kuwait, I saw that the fundamental law of the Cosmos also logically entails that humankind is not immortal. One day, a generation of children will be born who will not grow old enough to have children of their own. As this is a prospect that few are yet ready and willing to contemplate, I have endeavoured to show how this universal law consummates the final revolution in science, just as Johannes Kepler and Isaac Newton completed the first in the 1600s.

With the invaluable assistance of David Bohm during the 1980s, this I have done in a most satisfying and enjoyable manner. However, as an inveterate optimist, I have rarely paused to think that previous scientific revolutions have taken many years to be understood and accepted. For instance, at the time of Newton's funeral in 1727, Voltaire lamented that the Cartesians in France still had not accepted Newton's notion of 'action at a distance' from 1687. Another example in modern times is Bohm's theory of the Implicate Order, which unifies quantum and relativity theories. Even today, most physicists do not understand the indivisibility of the holomovement, as the foundation of Bohm's revolutionary cosmology.

For myself, I have extended this one-dimensional flowing movement into the multidimensional Ocean of Consciousness, visualized as a hyperball of water. Like the holomovement, the waves and currents on and beneath the surface of the Ocean are not separate from this immense metaphorical body of water. In Sanskrit, they are māyā 'deception, illusion, appearance' and līlā, the delightful 'play of the Divine', emerging from the still centre of the Ocean, as the Divine Origin of the Universe—the Source of Life.

It thus now looks as if my lifelong aspirations to be of service to humanity are unlikely to be fulfilled. For a major challenge I face in relating to my fellow human beings as a Holoramic visionary is that my worldview is all-encompassing. Indeed, by standing outside myself, what I prefer to call a Weltanschauung is not mine; it is universal. So, some take umbrage when I present a synthesis of all knowledge, as the elusive Theory of Everything, which I call Panosophy, whose framework is Integral Relational Logic (IRL).

Furthermore, in developing a comprehensive model of the psychodynamics of society – following 13.8 billions of years of evolution – I have adopted the most radical work ethic since the invention of money some 4,000 years ago. In modern banking systems, at any one moment the money supply must be finite to maintain the value of the currency. So, as attachment to money gives many a sense of security and identity in life, the authorities have created a global economy where we are told that we must fight each other for a slice of the limited financial pie, as apparently separate individuals, hardly conducive to World Peace.

I now live and work in solitude, distant from our war-torn world, while still paying taxes on my pension. My life took a radical change of direction at an apocalyptic epiphany on 27th April 1980, when I realized that data structures in both humans and computers are causal and hence energetic. This eureka moment was an antidote to a cataclysmic prenatal trauma that I suffered on 16th October 1941. Consequently, I did not become assimilated into the conflict-ridden culture I was born in during my early life or formal education. So, when evolution started afresh at the very beginning within me, I had little to unlearn.

But I don't expect anyone else to repeat this ontogeny, necessary to fully understand what is causing us to behave as we do and why we are being driven to the near-term extinction of the species that Carl Linnaeus called Homo sapiens 'wise human' in Systema Naturæ in 1758. The key point is that the accelerating pace of climate change is not anthropogenic. No government policies can avoid the inevitable. For what is happening to us all is just a natural consequence of the fundamental law of the Universe.

As I have become increasingly aware of humankind's destiny over the years, I have gone ever deeper into myself, much inspired by the Upanishads, which declare that Brahman and Atman are one and Tat tvam asi 'You are That.' In other words, we humans are never separate from the Divine, as the Immortal Ground of Being, for an instant. Even though such Self-realization is a taboo in cultures dominated by the Abrahamic religions, there is nothing more important at these end times we live in. For myself, as Love is the Divine Essence we all share, I dwell joyfully in the Stillness of Wholeness, which I encapsulate in the beautiful Sanskrit word Satchitānanda 'Bliss of Absolute Truth and Cosmic Consciousness'.
